able-bodied peers.” Creating adaptive sport opportunities so that every person, no matter what their ability, has an opportunity to participate. Michael Rosenkrantz explains that participating in sports is not only about the physical activity, but also about helping people become emotionally and socially fit as well. The mission for SoCal Adaptive Sports is to create a more inclusive society by providing competitive and recreational opportunities, focusing on people with physical disabilities and simultaneously working with athletes with other disabilities, while instilling a lifelong passion for wellness and helping everyone meet their full potential.
