UC Davis Extension Credit for the California Naturalist Program

UC Davis Extension Credit for the California Naturalist Program

Earn credit with the UC Agriculture and Natural Resources-created California Naturalist Program, which combines classroom, assigned reading, and field-based exploration of California's unique ecology. Program topics include natural history and geology, native plants and animals, freshwater resources and ecosystems, forest and rangeland resources, conservation biology, and the effects of climate change on California's natural communities.

This course is beneficial for educators, college students, land owners, interested citizens, and managers of botanical gardens, nature centers, or regional parks. Courses are led by experienced instructors, and feature lectures from field experts.

The California Naturalist Program is dedicated to fostering a diverse community of naturalists, recognizing the value of traditional ecological knowledge, as well as encouraging critical thinking about complex environmental issues. Hands-on learning, communication training, and interactive learning are used to engage participants and provide them with scientific literacy and critical thinking skills.
